The fundamental principles of a servant leader being understanding, guidance, growth and influence. The session was followed by a group activity performed by dividing the audience into groups of ten to list out the differences between a good leader and a bad leader along with the differences between a self-seeking and a servant-leader. The first session ended with the speaker giving an introduction to 'Servant Leadership'.

The second session involved an emotional activity requesting everyone to write down, on a sheet of paper, the name of a person whom they never forgave and throw it in the fire. The activity moved the audience encouraging them to strive as leaders with a forgiving heart. The speaker listed out the different types of leadership with a conclusion as servant leadership to be the effective leadership.

The speaker led the speech through funny and motivating visuals which imprinted the characters of 'Servant leadership' in the hearts of everyone present there. The qualities of stewardship, humility, active listening, confidence, persuasion, ethical behaviour, emotional trust, and enhancing teamwork were taught as to be the traits of a good leader. A pictorial representation of the inverted pyramid vision of leadership was shown which depicted the team at the the top tier with and the leader at the lower tier. The vision was to emphasize the concept of serving others before themselves. The event was further carried over with the vote of thanks by Ms. Stacy Krisalyn, the general secretary.

The event was successfully concluded by actively engaging all the audience. The audience led their way out as leaders with the qualities of servant leadership. The event effectively helped them to understand and practice selfless and service-oriented leadership qualities.
